

Barrett Arizona first-year State guide University

The best of both worlds

Barrett, The Honors College is a residential college at all four of ASU's metro Phoenix campuses for academically outstanding undergraduates. Barrett offers the mentorship of a dedicated faculty and exclusive academic and extracurricular opportunities. ASU's honors college is designed to complement your overall ASU experience by providing additional opportunities within your major or the university at large.

Four campuses, one college

Downtown Phoenix campus students thrive in a creative city culture near the state government, media organizations and medical centers.

Polytechnic campus offers an academic experience that builds on large research labs and makerspaces that support the philosophy of learning by doing.

Tempe campus students have a connected and vibrant experience with multiple living communities close to major companies and research centers.

West campus provides students a small and welcoming community of scholars with many leadership opportunities and support to excel in their learning.

"The Barrett experience was critical to my success because I've been able to build a support system of incredible peers and mentors — a system which has prepared me not just for my time at ASU but also long term. Whether that be research or networking, I'm thankful for these unique and diverse opportunities exclusive only to Barrett, and I hope to use these lessons to serve as a catalyst for social change."

The Barrett experience

Small classes

Barrett students can enroll in honors seminars that are small in size – about 20 students in a class – and taught by full-time faculty.

Three-tiered advising

Honors students have an academic advisor within their major, another within Barrett and a faculty honors advisor (dedicated advising professor) in their field of study.

Internships

There are more than 100 internship opportunities exclusively for Barrett students. Students have interned at places such as the Arizona State Capitol, Goldman Sachs, Microsoft, Google and the American Heart Institute, just to name a few.

Research

Barrett students have performed trailblazing research with distinguished faculty and through special partnerships with organizations such as Mayo Clinic and Indian Health Services, and through the Barrett College Fellows Research Program.

Priority registration

Honors students are always in the first group of students to register for classes each semester.

Study abroad

Barrett students are strongly encouraged to participate in global studies, either through a Barrett-specific travel program or the larger ASU study abroad offerings.

Scholarships

The Lorraine W. Frank Office of National Scholarships Advisement is located within Barrett and helps ASU students and alumni compete for national and international scholarships and fellowships that fund research, international study, professional development or postbaccalaureate study.

Student life

Barrett students live on the campus of their major for their first two years. Through organized social, cultural and sports activities, along with travel and service opportunities, honors students find multiple ways to get involved and stay connected.

Thriving Barrett alumni

Graduating from Barrett means doors will open to exciting career paths. Many honors alumni attend the best graduate and professional schools, and have gone on to successful careers in professions as diverse as medicine, law, research and entrepreneurship.
