Learn to thrive

Arizona State University
ASU is measured not by whom we exclude, but rather by whom we include and how they succeed.

— Excerpt from ASU's Charter
Let the adventure begin

Picture your future. Do you see yourself developing a life-saving vaccine? Producing content for a major media outlet? Maybe you’re launching your own business or performing on stage. Whatever your vision of success looks like, you’re already on your way and we’re here to help you write the next chapter in your journey.

At Arizona State University, you’ll be part of a new kind of university where traditional thinking is re-examined and innovative ideas thrive. Where academics challenge you and drive you to be your best. Where you can collaborate in some of the university’s most significant and meaningful endeavors. Where you’ll discover more about yourself than you ever knew.

And in the end, you’ll graduate with the tools to make your life one amazing story.
Learn from the most innovative minds in the world

At the heart of ASU’s exceptional academics and spirit of innovation is its faculty. The student-focused professors here are masters in their fields of study, bringing creative learning strategies to their instruction, and groundbreaking exploration and discovery to their research.

A sea of passion

ASU researcher Rolf Halden (featured at right with student Charlie R.) is the director of the ASU Biodesign Center for Environmental Health Engineering, and an expert in determining where mass-produced chemicals wind up in the environment, how they affect health and how to remove them. As a mentor to ASU student Charlie R., Halden is helping him use his passion for the oceans to make a difference.

ASU professor making advances in DNA nanotechnology

“DNA origami” is the shape of things to come for nanotechnology, thanks to a breakthrough from Hao Yan, a professor and director of the Center for Molecular Design and Biomimetics in the Biodesign Institute. This new strategy may revolutionize medicine by making and delivering drugs inside cells.
Award-winning author and NY Times correspondent joins ASU

Fernanda Santos, an award-winning author and correspondent for The New York Times, is one of Cronkite’s newest faculty members. As the Southwest Borderlands Initiative Professor, Santos shares her extensive knowledge and diverse experience with the next generation of journalists.

Making a global impact

A Barrett graduate who is preparing for a successful career is National Hispanic Scholar Victoria C. (featured at right with her mom during graduation). Victoria earned her degree in global politics in business and aspires to become a diplomat. She took part in three study abroad experiences while at ASU — in Scotland, the Czech Republic and Taiwan — and will soon be attending the University of Cambridge to pursue a master’s degree in international relations and politics.

Finding joy in giving back
Biochemistry and political science major Rachel G. has a full schedule. She's the president of the Barrett Leadership and Service Team; serves as president of All Walks, an organization that educates students on human trafficking; and is also part of a sorority that focuses on community service. These and other pursuits have earned her the Community Service Award, which honors students who have shown commitment to serving others and the needs of the community.

Digging his new life
ASU student Ricky N. feels most at home when he's digging up artifacts in a faraway land. An Army veteran and Mesa Community College transfer student, Ricky discovered his calling at Barrett — archaeology. Twice he's taken part in an excavation in Peru, exhuming skeletons and relics, and when he graduates, Ricky plans to study how the food ancient people ate affected them.
