Earn your degree from home

Earn a bachelor’s degree from ASU without leaving home. ASU and participating community colleges have established a partnership that allows you to complete your associate degree at your local community college and then pursue your ASU bachelor’s degree through classes delivered on that college’s campus. You can also take advantage of additional cost savings with a reduced ASU tuition rate.

Get a head start with Universal Learner Courses

Through this program, a selection of first-year college courses are offered online at ASU and open to everyone. With these courses, you can test the college waters, earn college credit for a fraction of the cost and pay only if you pass the class. Courses are taught by ASU faculty and credits earned may be used toward your degree at ASU or at another university.

The one-size-fits-all philosophy doesn't work when it comes to picking the right college experience. We all have different interests and learning styles. ASU is made up of several campuses — each with its own identity, focus and size — as well as ASU Online, an innovative, fully online learning experience. Not sure which style is right for you? Take this quick quiz to find the ASU experience that fits you best.

Office of American Indian Initiatives

The Office of American Indian Initiatives helps share ASU's New American University vision with tribal nations by building and strengthening relationships between the university and American Indian tribes. ASU continues to develop an impressive cohort of scholars engaged in American Indian cultural, social, educational, legal and economic issues. This office plays a key role in amplifying and supporting American Indian programming throughout the university to promote the success of American Indian students.
